IN BETWEEN WORLDS

In Between Worlds brings together four emerging contemporary artists whose practices unfold across different states of imagination, struggle, observation, and coexistence. While each artist departs from a distinct visual language, their works collectively reveal a shared concern with the spaces between things: between memory and invention, body and mind, nature and symbol, individual experience and collective life.

For this exhibition at G13 Gallery, the four artists present works that are not merely images to be viewed, but worlds to be entered. Their practices suggest that contemporary art, especially among a younger generation of artists, is increasingly shaped by personal mythologies, emotional negotiations, and close observation of the environments they inhabit. Through drawing, painting, installation, layering, repetition, and symbolic construction, these artists transform familiar subjects into expanded territories of meaning.

Aimman Hafizal's Guardian of the GalaxSea merges two formative sources from his childhood imagination: marine creatures from his earliest comic-making experience and celestial imagery inspired by glow-in-the-dark stickers of moons, rockets, UFOs, planets, and stars. In the work, the oceanic and the cosmic are brought together into a paradoxical universe centred around a monumental red moon. This red moon becomes more than a visual anchor; it functions as an inhabited world filled with astronaut-like beings, capsule forests, hotels, game centres, onsen, and imagined structures that suggest a thriving alternative community. Through shaped canvas and hand-painted laser-cut forms, Aimman extends painting into space, allowing the work to operate as an immersive narrative environment. His practice reminds us that childhood imagination is not something left behind, but a source that can be reactivated and transformed into a contemporary visual language.

is complete, particularly in a practice that resists fixed realism or easy resolution. Through this, Amirul positions drawing as an act of endurance, self-reflection, and courage.

Haziq Syawal's work turns towards nature, but not through direct representation. Instead, he draws from landscapes, birds, flowers, and organic forms, transforming them into symbolic compositions that explore flow, coexistence, movement, and interconnectedness. His use of acrylic on jute, layering, and masking techniques creates visual rhythms that guide the viewer's eye across the surface. A key aspect of his practice is the use of flowing masking patterns rather than rigid straight lines, suggesting movement found in natural systems. In his highlighted work, pigeons and flowers are arranged within a layered composition, pointing to the way different living elements share the same environment. Haziq's paintings invite viewers to slow down and discover relationships between forms, spaces, and rhythms.

Nik Mohd Shahfiz's work reflects on the beauty of coexistence within shared urban space. His overlapping figures represent people from different backgrounds moving through the same environment, each carrying their own memories, stories, and dreams. The city becomes a site of temporary encounters, where individual journeys briefly cross and contribute to a larger collective narrative. In the painting, the bronze monument stands as a symbol of history, the surrounding buildings represent present-day life, while the dark forest in the distance suggests an unknown future. Through this layered reading of space, Nik considers how people continue to live together despite their differences, sharing the same streets, spaces, and experiences.

Together, these four artists offer different ways of understanding what it means to exist between worlds. Aimman constructs an imagined universe where marine life and outer space coexist. Amirul transforms the studio into a place of struggle, discipline, and psychological negotiation. Haziq observes the natural world as a system of flow and interconnection. Nik reflects on the city as a shared space shaped by memory, movement, and coexistence.

As emerging contemporary artists, their works do not seek to provide fixed answers. Instead, they reveal processes of searching, testing, layering, and becoming. The exhibition presents art-making as a space of transition: between the personal and the universal, the visible and the symbolic, the real and the imagined. In this sense, In Between Worlds is not only a title, but also a condition shared by these artists as they continue to develop their voices within the contemporary art landscape.
